Stanley startled awake to the ring of his alarm clo moment he was confused why the alarm clock was going o forgotten to turn it off last night?
Suddenly, the excited knot in his stomach reminded him t day-his first-ever day of work. After turning 16 years old two had wasted no time applying to several locations where he saw "N him right on the spot and called him the next day offering him a job as a stocker.

Stanley quickly got dressed in his new uniform, a polo shirt and black p which he had ironed and carefully laid out the night before. He greeted his mot the kitchen, insisting he didn't need breakfast.

Julia and Pedro quickly sprang up from their beds with excitement. It seemed like such a long week as they waited for Saturday to arrive. "Grand Canyon, here we come!" shouted Pedro as he eagerly rushed downstairs for breakfast. It was a Valdez family tradition to take a road trip during the first weekend of spring. This year would surely be no exception.

"Now, which trail should we visit first?" asked Julia. "I say we start things off at the South Rim Trail."

"I don't think so!" replied Pedro. "Grandview Trails should be first on the list for sure. It has the best view, lots of huge rocks, and the freshest air."

"Settle down and enjoy your pancakes," said Mom. "Besides, everyone knows that Hermit Trail is the best place for hiking."

Long ago, on the banks of the Napo River in Peru, there lived a young fisherman. He grew up listening to his grandmother tell stories about the magical pink dolphins that lived in the river. These dolphins were called the bufeo colorado by the people of his village. It was said that they could change their shape. They would sometimes appear in front of a villager as a beautiful man or woman. Then they would take the villager to the underwater kingdom of Encante. It was said that this kingdom was a paradise no human could ever dream of. However, no human had ever returned from it.
The young fisherman was not afraid of the stories. Every morning, when he went out on his boat to fish, he hoped to see one of the strange and wonderful pink dolphins.
One terrible morning, the young fisherman's boat returned empty to the shore. His mother cried, believing that he had drowned, but his grandmother knew better. She was sure that he had been taken to the underwater kingdom by the bufeo colorado.

Long ago, there lived a ferocious tiger that stalked a small Korean village. The people of the village were so scared that they didn't leave their houses. Something had to be done, so the village elders met to devise a plan.
The village elders discussed the situation in great lengths until they finally had a plan. They would set a trap for the tiger by digging deep holes around the village, and then they would fill each hole with meat for bait and cover the hole with branches.
Everyone in the village helped build the traps, and every family spared a little meat to place inside the traps. Finally, everyone went to their houses to await the troublesome tiger.
The following morning, the village chief's son journeyed to the village from the city. As he approached the village, he heard the frightening roar of the tiger, so he carefully investigated the hole that the sound was coming from. There was the tiger, roaring miserably.
"Please help me out of here, or I'll die of starvation! I will forever be in your debt," said the tiger.
The young man replied, "You would surely eat me if you were free!"
"I promise that I will not eat you," replied the cunning tiger.
The young man was convinced, so he found a long
