Julia and Pedro quickly sprang up from their beds with excitement. It seemed like such a long week as they waited for Saturday to arrive. "Grand Canyon, here we come!" shouted Pedro as he eagerly rushed downstairs for breakfast. It was a Valdez family tradition to take a road trip during the first weekend of spring. This year would surely be no exception.

"Now, which trail should we visit first?" asked Julia. "I say we start things off at the South Rim Trail."

"I don't think so!" replied Pedro. "Grandview Trails should be first on the list for sure. It has the best view, lots of huge rocks, and the freshest air."

"Settle down and enjoy your pancakes," said Mom. "Besides, everyone knows that Hermit Trail is the best place for hiking."

The Ungrateful Tiger

Origin: Korea

Long ago, there lived a ferocious tiger that stalked a small Korean village. The people of the village were so scared that they didn't leave their houses. Something had to be done, so the village elders met to devise a plan.

The village elders discussed the situation in great lengths until they finally had a plan. They would set a trap for the tiger by digging deep holes around the village, and then they would fill each hole with meat for bait and cover the hole with branches.

Everyone in the village helped build the traps, and every family spared a little meat to place inside the traps. Finally, everyone went to their houses to await the troublesome tiger.

The following morning, the village chief's son journeyed to the village from the city. As he approached the village, he heard the frightening roar of the tiger, so he carefully investigated the hole that the sound was coming from. There was the tiger, roaring miserably.

"Please help me out of here, or I'll die of starvation! I will forever be in your debt," said the tiger.

The young man replied, "You would surely eat me if you were free!"

"I promise that I will not eat you," replied the cunning tiger.

The young man was convinced, so he found a long
