Camp Honeybee

Jin and Seung peered out the back windows of their father's car. He'd driven them to Ca where they'd spend the next week of their summer vacation. The camp had many activities for the girls to enjoy. They both wiggled in their seats as they saw other campers arriving.

"Okay, girls," Dad said as he opened his car door. "Are you ready for camp?"

Both girls cheered as they climbed out of the back seats with their small suitcases. They followed Dad to a table to check in. After finding the cabin they would share, they said goodbye to Dad and scurried off in search of activities.

"I'm going to start with canoeing!" Jin pointed to the neat line of canoes on the sandy shore rimming the lake. She loved the water. She was on her school's swim team and had even won medals. Dad often called her "Jinfish."

Seung shook her head as she frowned at the lake. "Not me. I'm heading for the arts and crafts station. They're making kites!" Seung was always making something. Her room at home was filled with her projects. Dad proudly displayed some of her works of art at his office.

"I'll see you at lunchtime then. Have fun!" Jin gave her sister a wave. The two girls walked off in opposite directions to enjoy their first day at Camp Honeybee.
