1. Athena and Poseidon

Every city in Greece wanted a god to protect it. Poseidon loved watching over towns, especially coastal ones. He was the God of the Sea, after all. People often gave gifts and built temples to honor the gods that watched over their cities. Poseidon liked being worshipped, so he was always on the lookout for more towns to protect. He wasn't the only god searching for towns, however.

Athena was the Goddess of Wisdom and daughter of Poseidon's brother, Zeus. She also liked having towns to watch over. On the same day, both Athena and Poseidon came across a new village along the shore. They both wanted to claim it, but the people did not want two gods watching over them. Gods often fought with each other, and the town knew that would cause a lot of trouble for them. Poseidon decided that he wanted the people to choose which god should protect them. The people, however, knew that this would cause trouble for them, too.

Suddenly, Athena suggested each god give the town a gift. The people could choose a god based on which one gave the better gift. Poseidon accepted and gave the town a stream. The people were delighted, but when they drank the water, they found it to be salty and undrinkable. It was of no use to them.

Athena supplied the town with an olive tree. The people ate the yummy olives and relaxed in the tree's s. And with its seeds, more trees could be

The winner was Athena, and she became the protector of the coastal village. The people named the town Athens in her honor. Poseidon and Athena remained rivals, however, and they continued to battle over other matters and other towns.
